A World of Upstanders: Rescuers and Prosecutors

At Yad Vashem, the Holocaust museum in Jerusalem, Israel, there are 25,271 people who are memorialized as Righteous Among the Nations, non-Jews from 45 countries who saved Jews during the Holocaust.

There has been no similar effort to recognize people who risked their lives to rescue innocent people targeted for extermination since the Holocaust, during the genocides in Cambodia, Rwanda, Bosnia, Guatemala, East Timor; in today's mass killings in Myanmar, Congo, Central African Republic, Darfur; and many other places.

World Without Genocide is initiating a program called A World of Upstanders: Rescuers and Prosecutors. We seek nominations of people who have been ‘upstanders’ in any of these past or current conflicts, either as rescuers who acted to save the lives of others or as prosecutors who sought justice on behalf of those targeted by genocide and mass killing.

The research and the stories of those who are selected will be archived online for the purposes of research, education, and commemoration.

Our nomination and selection process will be handled by our Survivors Advisory Council and members of the Benjamin B. Ferencz Fellows in Human Rights and Law, law students who work on issues of international justice.

A person can be considered for selection as an Upstander in two categories:

1. As a rescuer, when information based on survivor testimony or other documentation clearly demonstrates that a person risked his or her life, freedom, and safety to rescue one or several people from the threat of death or other bodily harm during a genocide or mass killing without exacting monetary compensation or other rewards. This applies equally to rescuers who are alive today or who have passed away.

2. As a prosecutor, when information based on court documentation clearly demonstrates that a lawyer undertook extraordinary steps to bring a perpetrator of genocide or mass killing to justice through international or domestic courts. This applies equally to lawyers who are alive today or who have passed away.

In order to nominate a person for selection in A World of Upstanders, please send the following documentation to admin@worldwithoutgenocide.org
