Genocide: the intent to exterminate, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial, or religious group.

We are at an inflection point in history. Intensifying crises around the world have shaken our lives in ways that will be felt for decades. The impact is not felt equally, as geopolitics, power, and propaganda marginalize and victimize some people based on their race, religion, ethnic identity, or national origin. This can cause fear, hate, and division and an escalation into violence.

Participants will examine patterns of hate and violence today and how similar patterns shaped the Holocaust and the genocide of the American Indians. A free and independent press is indispensable as a check on these patterns and crucial to democracies. We will look closely at a recent pattern of threats and attacks on the press. Institute students will learn skills to meet today’s shifting realities and challenges. Through discussions with experts, activists, and Holocaust survivors, students will understand how to become effective upstanders and advocates for change and social justice.

Institute students can apply for the Benjamin B. Ferencz Young Fellows in Human Rights and Law. See details at www.worldwithoutgenocide.org/about-us/young-fellows

Learn from local activists and experts in the field, discussions with survivors, and hands-on activities.

Serve during the school year by participating with local organizations.

Advocate for local, state, and national policies.

Lead as an ‘upstander’ and become part of the next generation of human rights leaders.

While most summer programs are postponed because of COVID-19, the 2020 Summer Institute will continue as planned - but online. The current health pandemic has raised serious human rights challenges, and our involvement is more important now than ever.
